Background

Although Africa has traditionally been the cradle of great leadership (Many African leaders are well known around the world—including Nelson Mandela, Kwame Nkrumah, Steve Biko, Julius Nyerere and recently, Madam Ellen Johnson Sirleaf, just to name a few), today, the demand for effective and systematic leadership development in Africa is growing more rapidly than ever before. It has strongly been argued that a critical shortage of upcoming leaders is responsible for the underdevelopment of Africa and Liberia is of no exception.

In this regard, the Liberia Research and Development Networks (LRDN), with support from the Chinese Embassy, wishes to inform all Liberian youths with the minimum of high school diploma of a free training opportunity. He or she must have a proven record of voluntarism or community service to take advantage of an up training seminar on “Leadership and Development Approaches” beginning September 19 – 23, 2017.

Organization Profile

Liberia Research and Development Network (LRDN) is a nongovernmental and nonprofit research based and development focused institution that is legally registered under the government of Liberia. Our vision is to be a leading research and development institution dedicated to advancing, applying and facilitating high standards of social and natural science research practice for a wide variety of audiences within Liberia and abroad and promote development oriented activities.

We are committed to enhancing social and natural science research support to scholars and public agencies for research, and educational activities; conduct quality research through innovative data collection and analysis, build capacities and provide consultancy services. We accomplish this by sharing a diverse, trained and intellectually engaged research analysts and officers; efficient and effective system and process restrained by ethical leadership.

We are also engaged in establishing and developing research relationships within Universities and Community Colleges across Liberia and with external public policy makers and researchers; designing and providing quality research by adhering to the highest ethical standards and professional best practices to ensure integrity, and bring together Researchers, Scholars, Students Policy makers in the areas of Social and Natural Sciences and provide a forum for standard research practice.
